Larger teams need more time to ensure everyone learns something new and ideally establishes an interesting connection with each other team member. Decorate the venue. Too many facilitators limit themselves to using ground rules when other tools might work much better.

The exercise can be used if issued on the day of the assessment, but obviously you need to have enough paper pages. Five teams of three per team is fine, so is four pairs or other similar splits. One person might feel terribly threatened by a certain change which another person can take in their stride.

Take a minute to consider - What thirty seconds of your life would you most want to spend on? List tasks and different methods above a just a few examples. A different connection with each person, not a single connection that every team member shares.
